Why legal roles need eSigning...

eSignatures have been in use for many years, however, recent updates from The Law Society have seen practice notes put into place. This will mean that the legal industry can finally get comfortable with, and start to enjoy, the benefits that come with electronic signatures.

You can read the eSignature practice note here.

“Commercial contracts drafted by solicitors operate in every aspect of our economy and can govern deals worth millions, or even billions, of pounds. There is no room for error when so much is at stake, therefore it is vital that solicitors can have confidence in the legal framework surrounding such innovations.”

-Robert Bourns, Law Society President

So, how do eSignatures help?

- Searchable and secure documentation

Protect and securely store documents in your online account for as long as your retention policy requires. Your account is accessible through email/password login, and, within your account you are able to set team permissions. Further restricting access to contracts and their content.

- Reassurance for clients

Adopting an up to date approach illustrates your company's forward thinking attitude and willingness to continue to develop and grow. You will also accommodate your signer's schedules. Allowing clients time to review documents in a time-frame which is suited to them. Which is particularly useful for those lengthier contracts, or when an office visit isn't possible.

- Ensure all content is seen

Reviewing legal documentation involves heavy concentration. It's essential that no areas are skimmed. This is ensured by adding a check box to every page, or, next to specific sections of the contract that require extra attention.

- Reinforce enforceability

eSignatures highlight the fact that a signer's signature has absolutely not been tampered with. This is done by logging the signer's email address, geolocation & IP address. These details are logged, along with a full audit trail of the signer's interaction with the document. And then emailed as a PDF to all parties upon completion.

We're already helping these companies:

"We trialled a number of competitors but Signable was better in every aspect to what we saw from the rest. Whenever we can use an electronic signature for a client to sign our documents we use Signable. It helps turn business around quicker and the clients enjoy the ease of use."

-Kristian Rose, Project Manager,
Stanton Fisher
